

I'm a frequent flyer on many airlines and have 1.5 million+ miles on American Airlines. I also have a cell phone.

I urge you to NOT allow using them in flight. People can still use them as at present before the plane takes off and upon landing. There is no compelling argument for them and the inconvenience and frustration to others of inflight conversation will be problematic. As you know, the vast majority of calls are routine, people tend to talk louder on cell phones in public places and that noise will only increase if calls are allowed in flight in a confined space. Finally, calls in flight will inevitably result in arguments, verbal and physical fights between passengers and between passengers and crew and this will IMPACT SAFETY. If you wish let people use computers if they wish to communicate or just wait the hour or two until the flight lands.